"I've always thought that we talk about youthful loves like old people sitting on soft sofas. They are said to be light, short and multiple, as if they had little importance. However, if we really try to remember them, or better still, if we can experience them because we're young enough to do so, they're anything but ephemeral. They determine our emotional behavior for life, and have the power to change every second of it. Falling in love is like throwing yourself headfirst into a cyclone."
